English for Health Sciences

HOFT's speaking, listening, reading and writing elective involves activities incorporating hundreds of commonly used terms and expressions relating to the fields of medicine, nursing, pharmacy and other health sciences. Students of health sciences learn the critical field-specific language necessary for academic and clinical success.

Other sample ELECTIVES

English for Computers - Students learn typing, internet searches, and Google Apps. They also learn to format personal and business letters, write using templates, and create academic essays in an independent and collaborative environment.

American Accent Training - The goal is improved pronunciation, so pronunciation does not interfere with communication. Students learn the rhythm and intonation of American style English to become an effective communicator.
